General Feedback

- What is a use case?
  1. It should be a system function/interaction
  2. It should fulfil a business objective
  3. If something is a use case, it should make sense if we were to go to the system and do that and that only (no other actions)
     - Need to know how to differentiate between a use case vs a step of a use case
  4. Use cases are not just what the system does
     - E.g. “check password during login”, “send email confirmation”, “add to database”, “calculate amount”, etc are not use cases
  5. Use cases are seen from the perspective of a user rather than from the perspective of the system
     - i.e. “get a list of chat messages” rather than “receive a chat message”

General Feedback

- A use case diagram should not have the system itself as an actor
  - Usually, we only time event in the use case diagram
  - But if you want to draw, you can create an “actor” called TIME

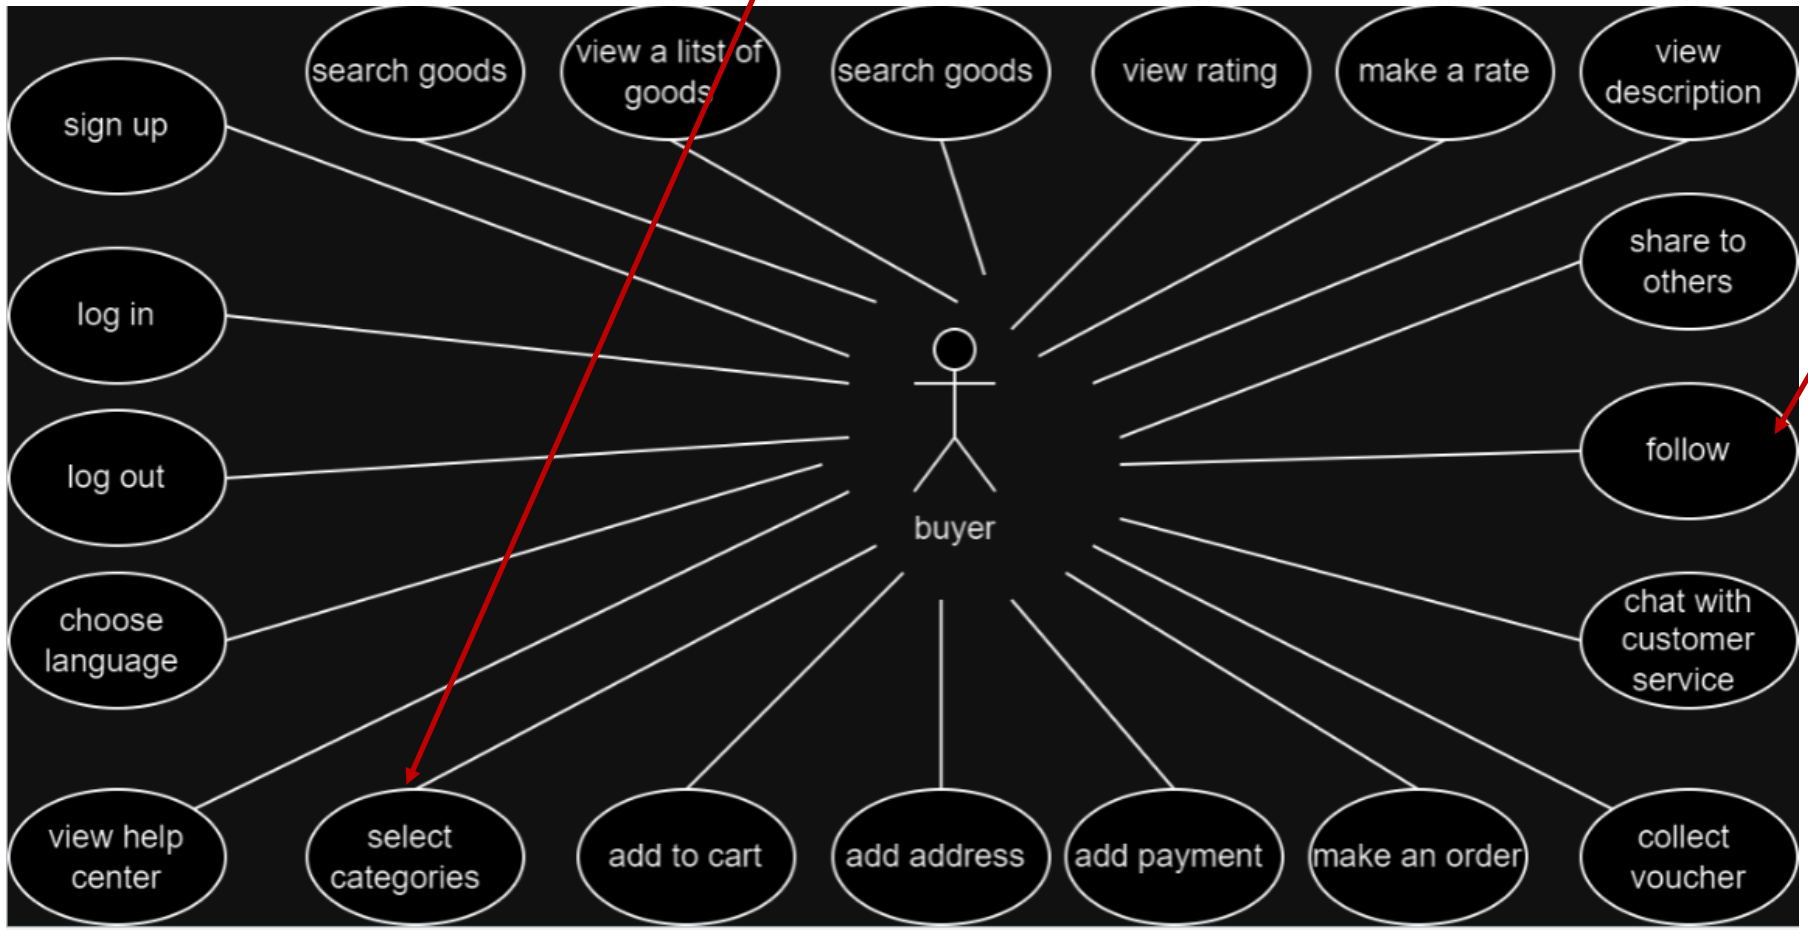
Use cases are not pages

Make sure you don't treat steps of a use case as use cases

Make sure that the font size of the diagram is big enough. If not, it will not be viewable on hardcopy or even softcopy

Make sure you don’t treat steps of a use case as use cases

Be explicit what a use case is



Shopping:

28. Store list of items in shopping cart
29. Add product to the shopping cart
30. Remove product from the shopping cart
31. View the contents of the shopping cart
32. Modify the contents of the shopping cart
33. Apply discount codes during checkout

Checkout Process:

34. Proceed to checkout for selected items.
35. Select shipping options and enter delivery address.
36. Choose payment method (credit/debit card, e-wallet, bank transfer, cash on delivery).
37. Review and confirm the order.

Make sure you don't treat steps of a use case as use cases

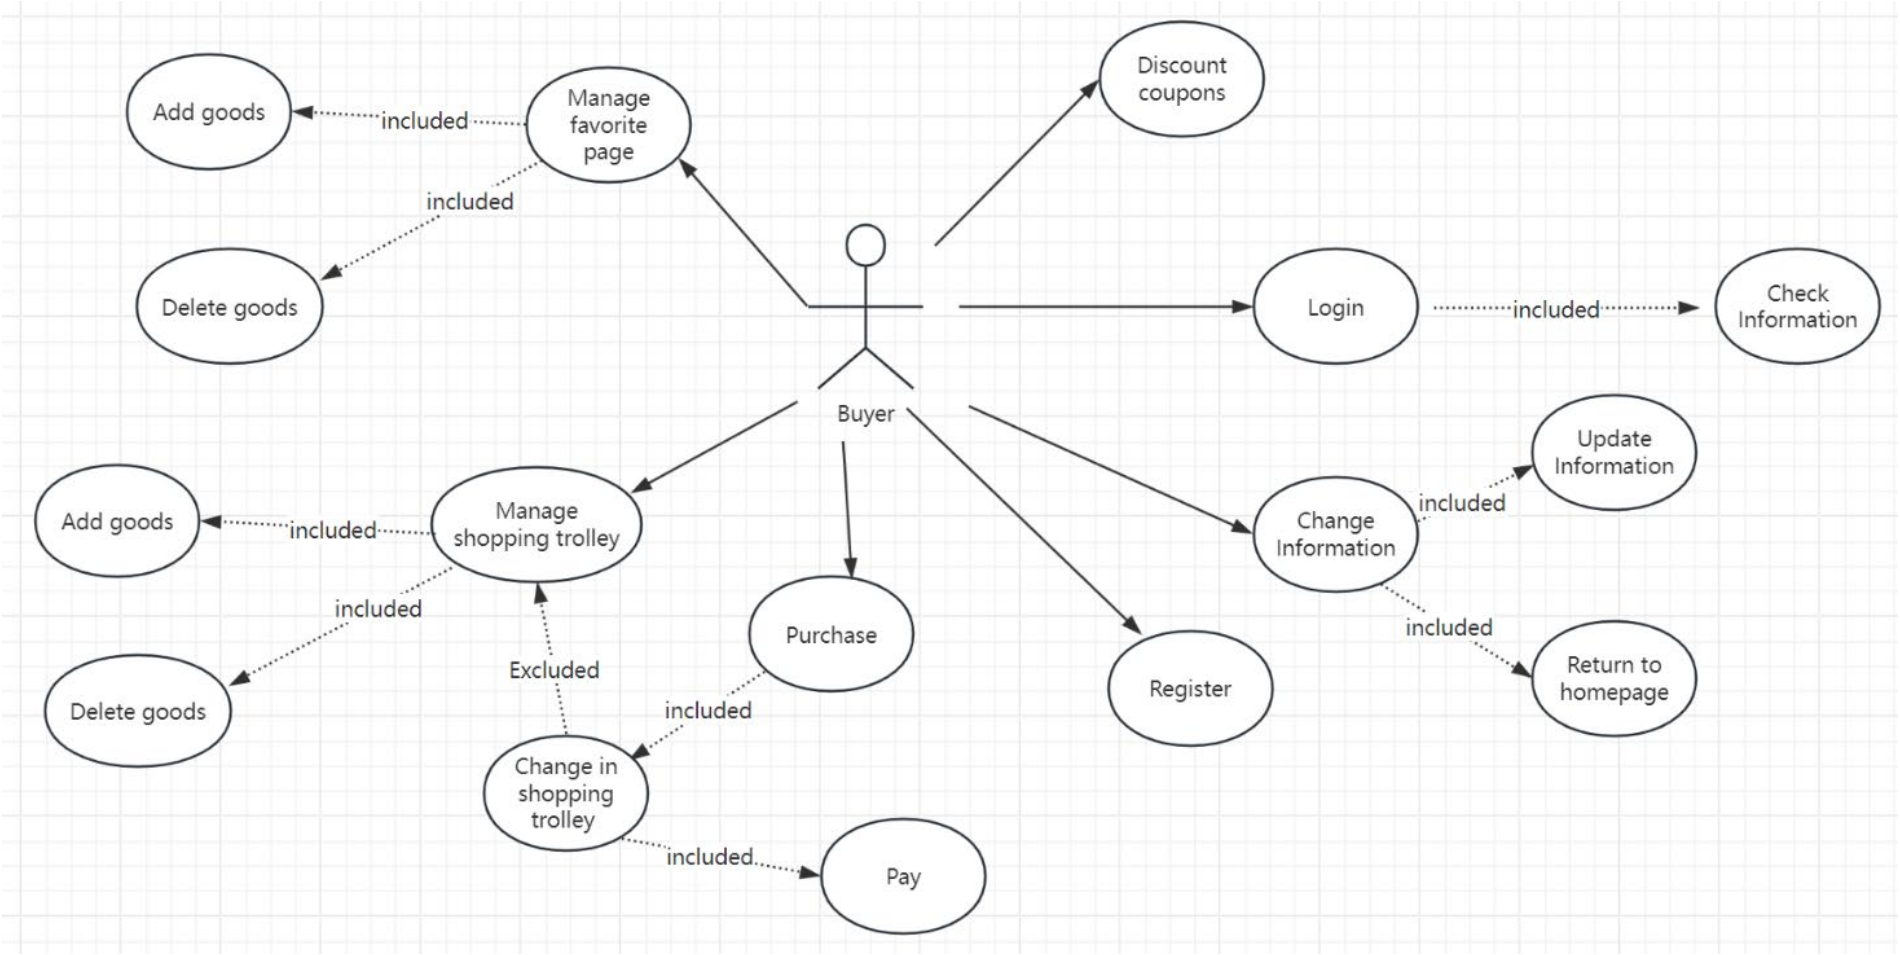
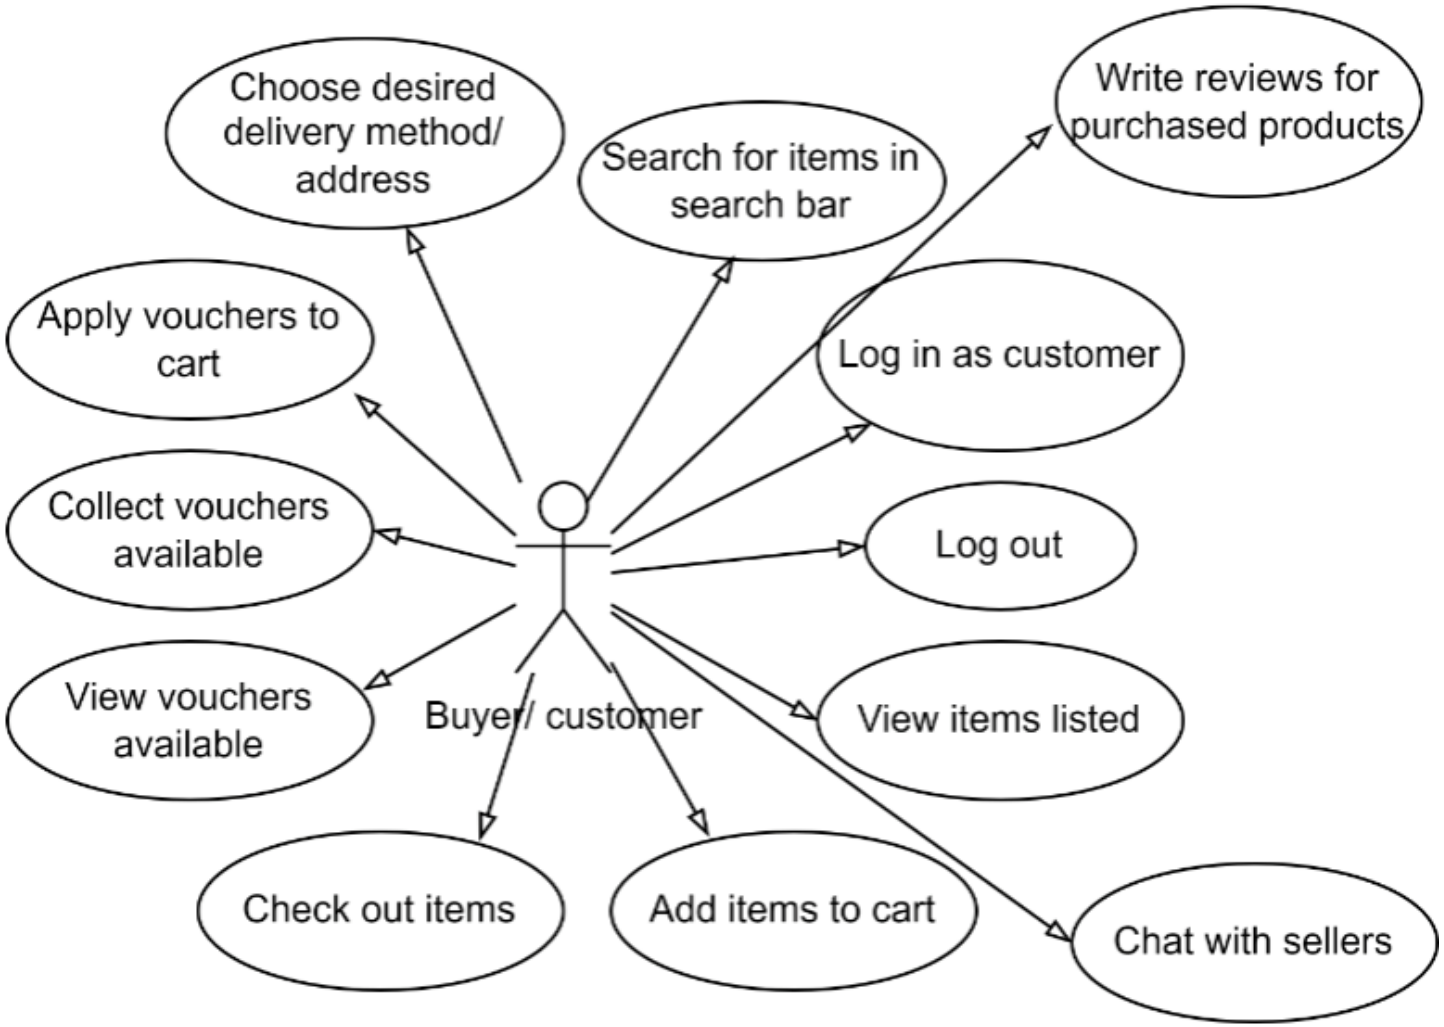
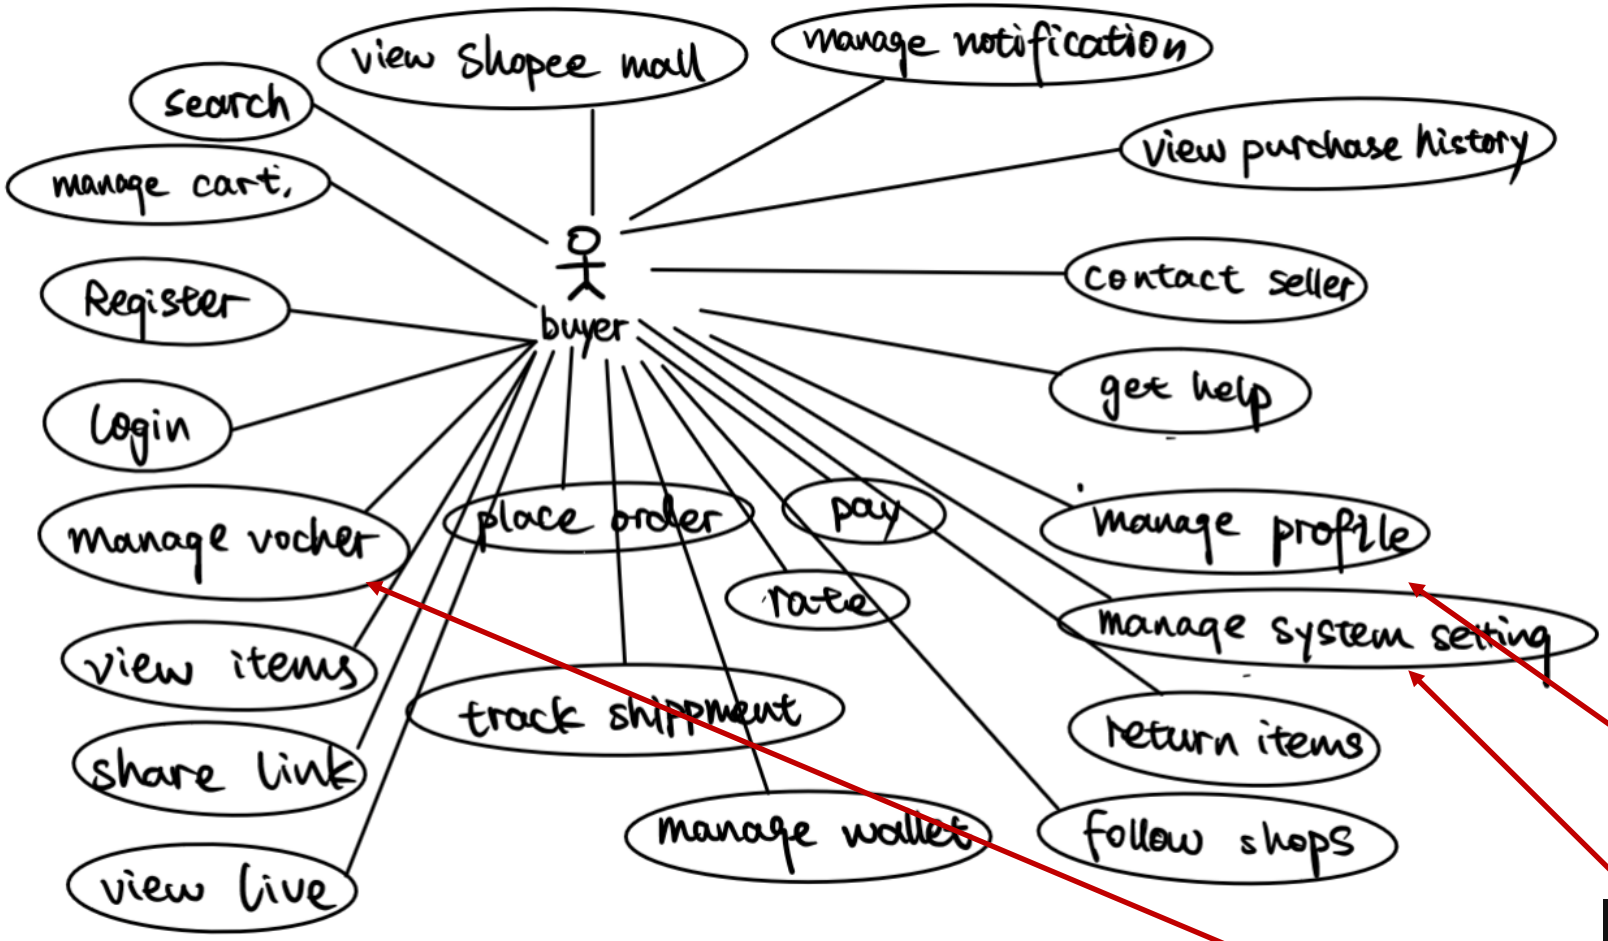
Don’t break the information that is displayed for “view profile” as separate use cases

Focus on getting all the use cases in an exhaustive manner (i.e. get the list of all the system functions) rather than roughly describing the requirements



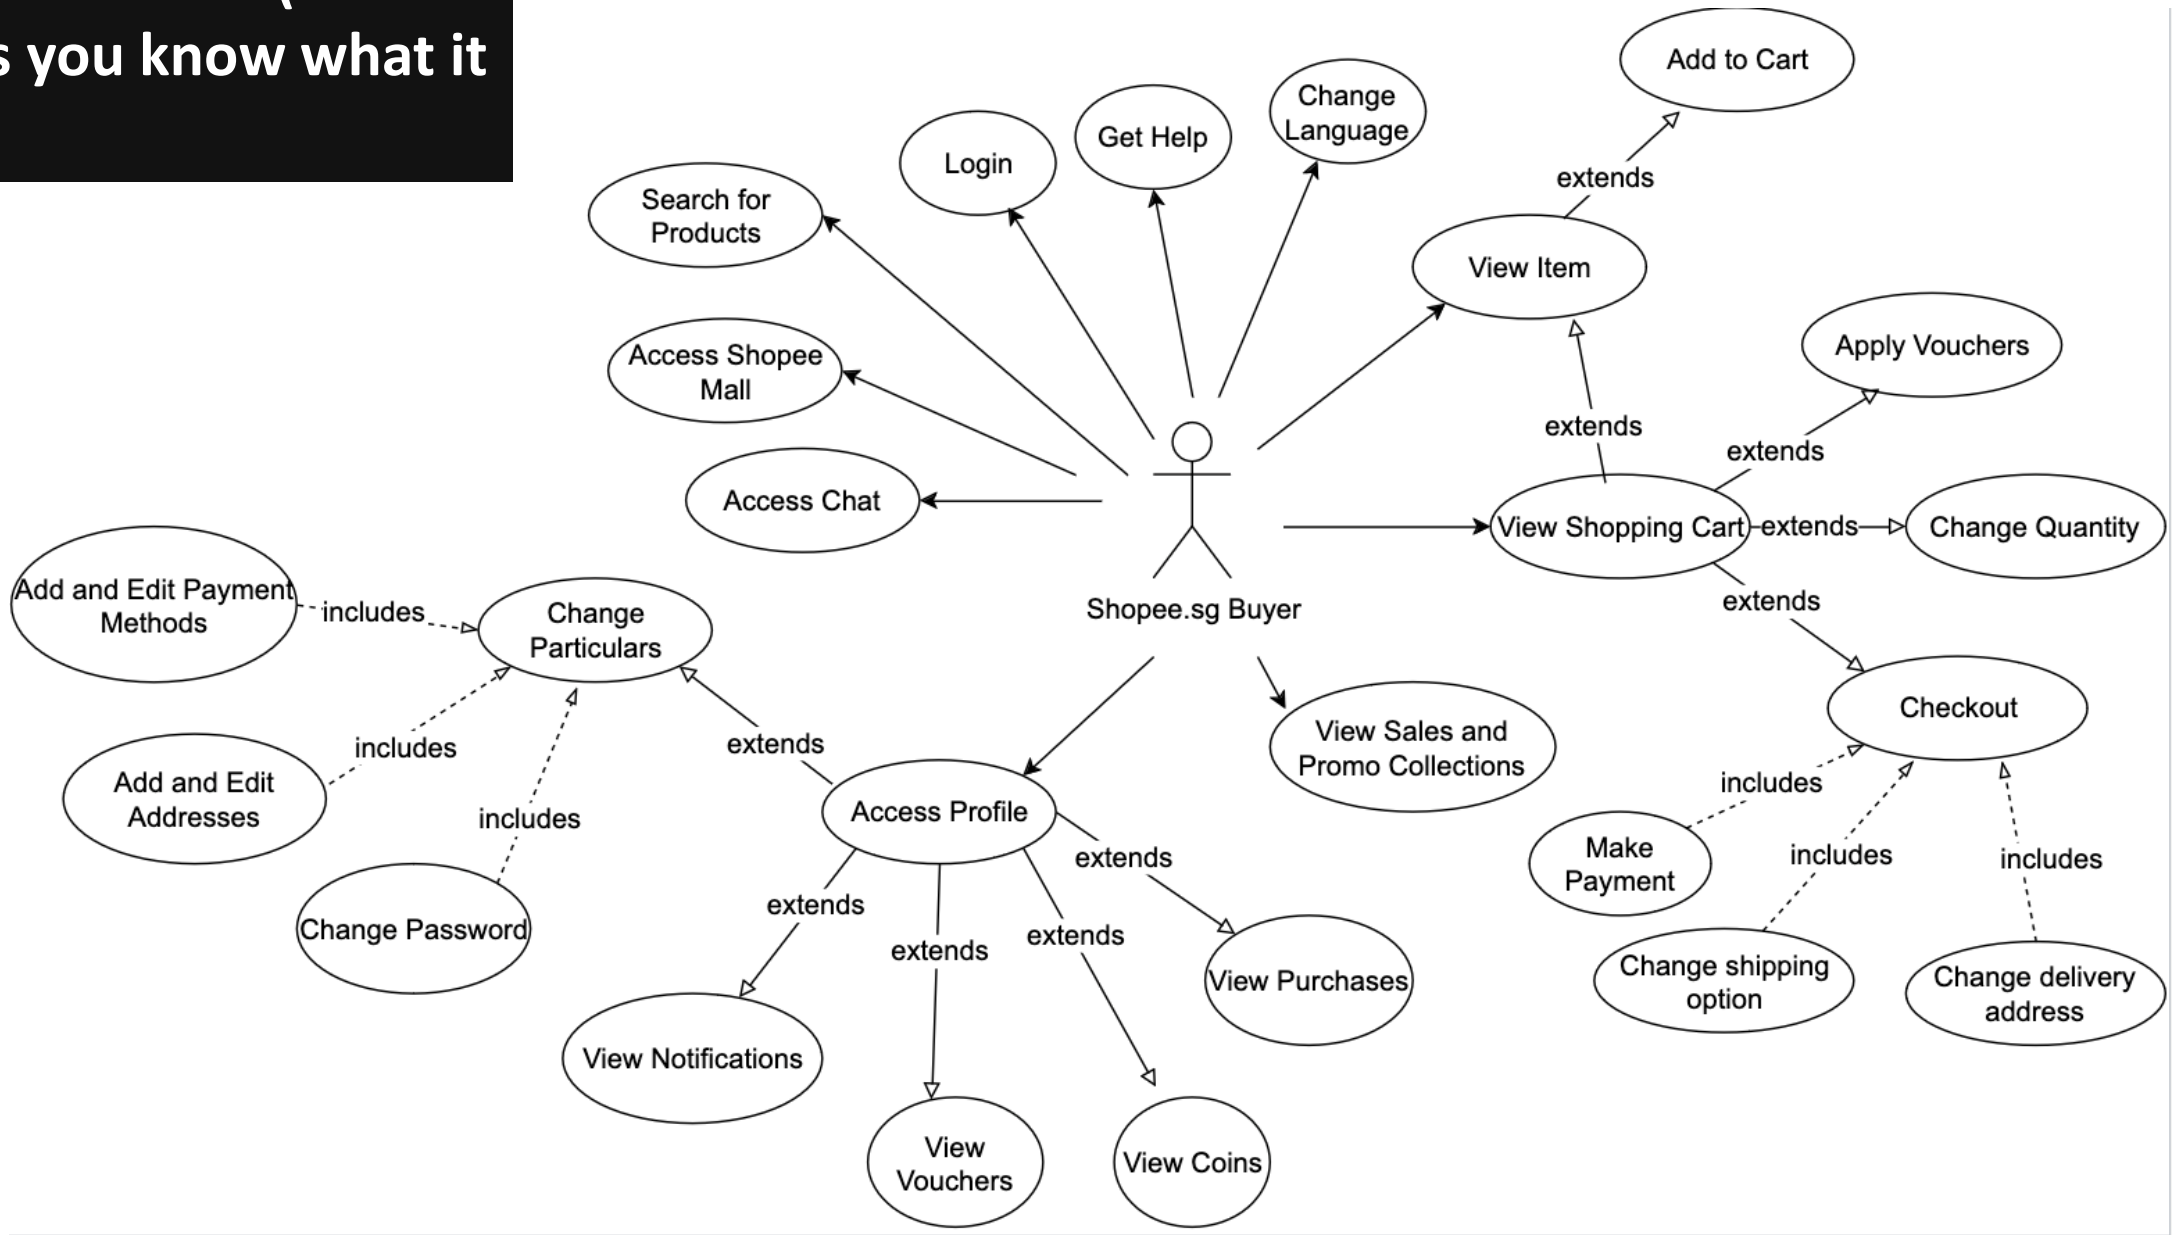
choice of arrow is wrong

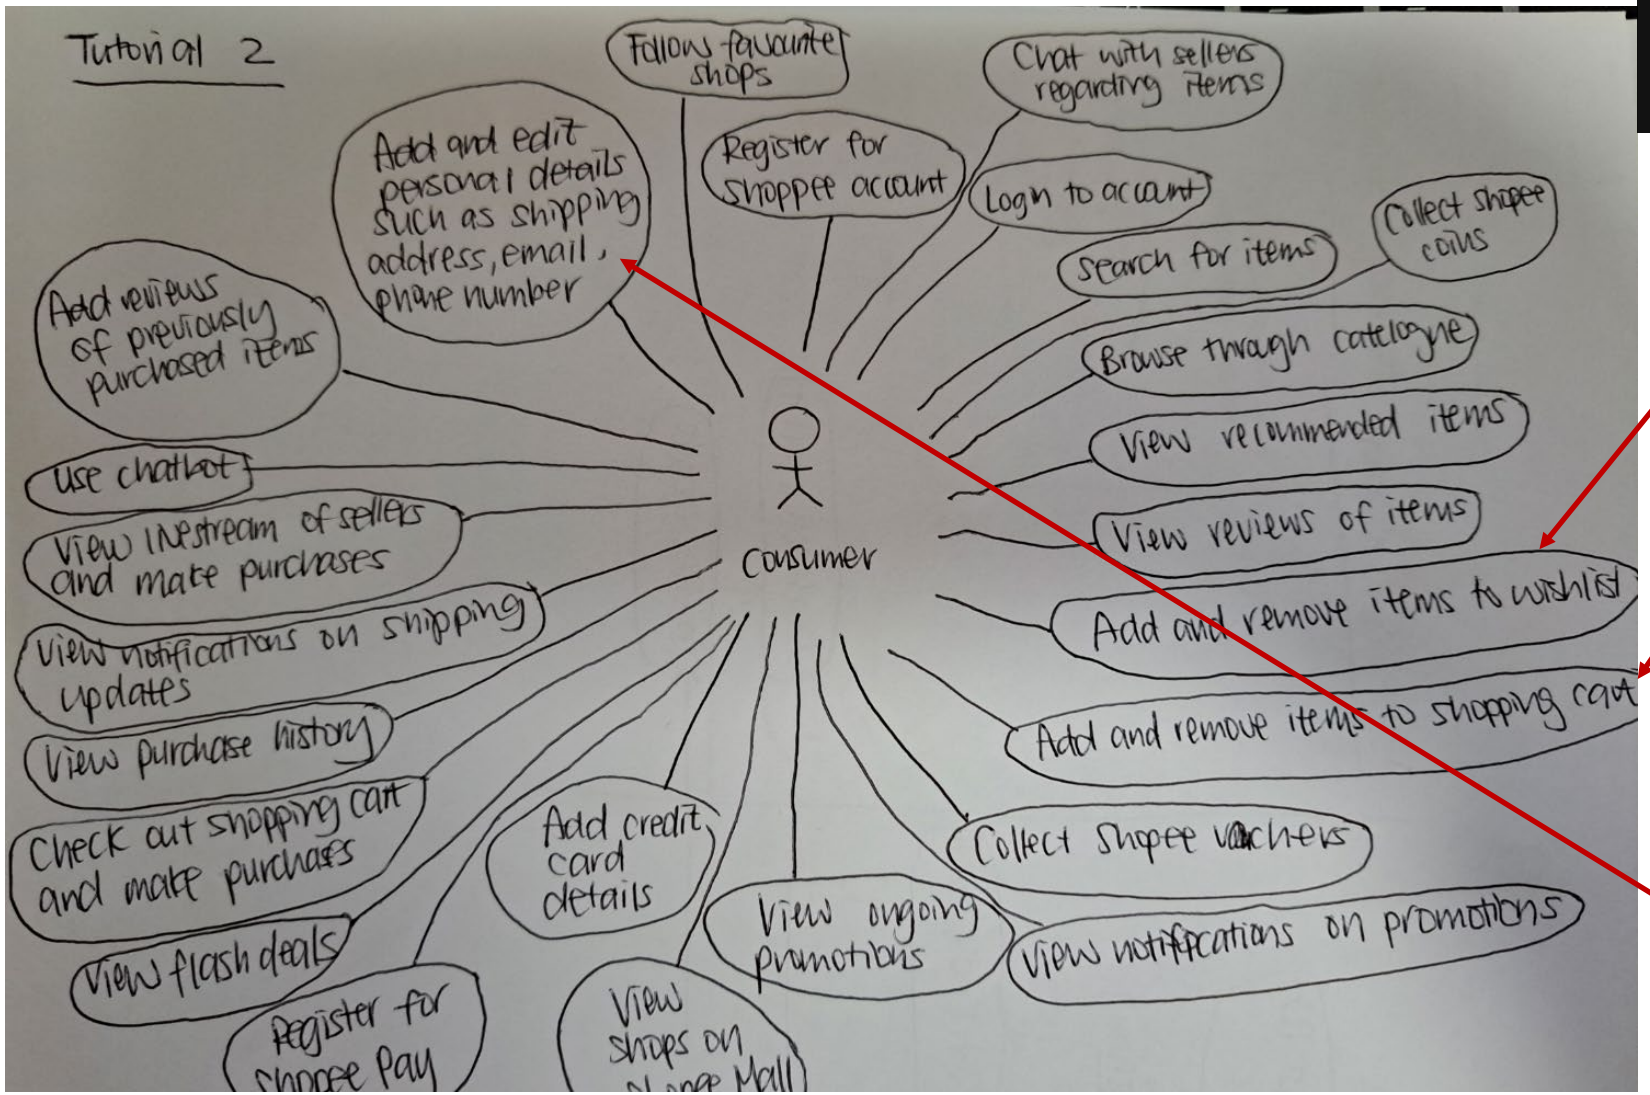




Too vague. One use case is one action that the user can do. Don't lump a set of operations together as a use case

Use of extends and includes are wrong in this case (don't use it unless you know what it works)

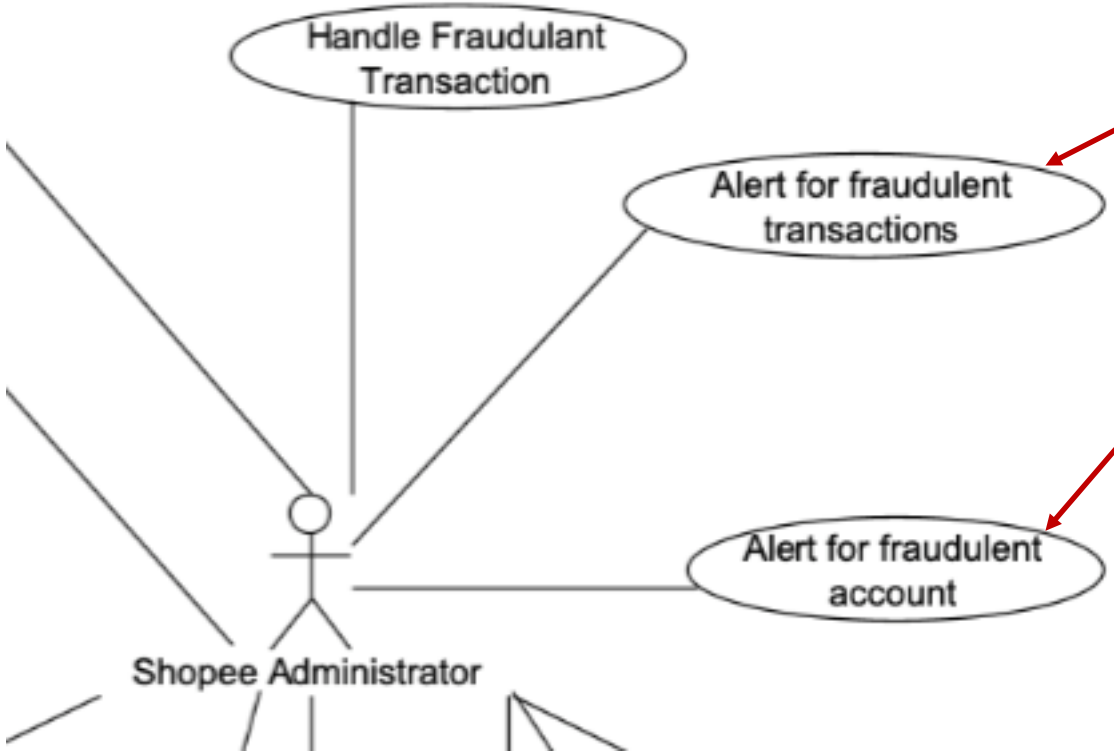




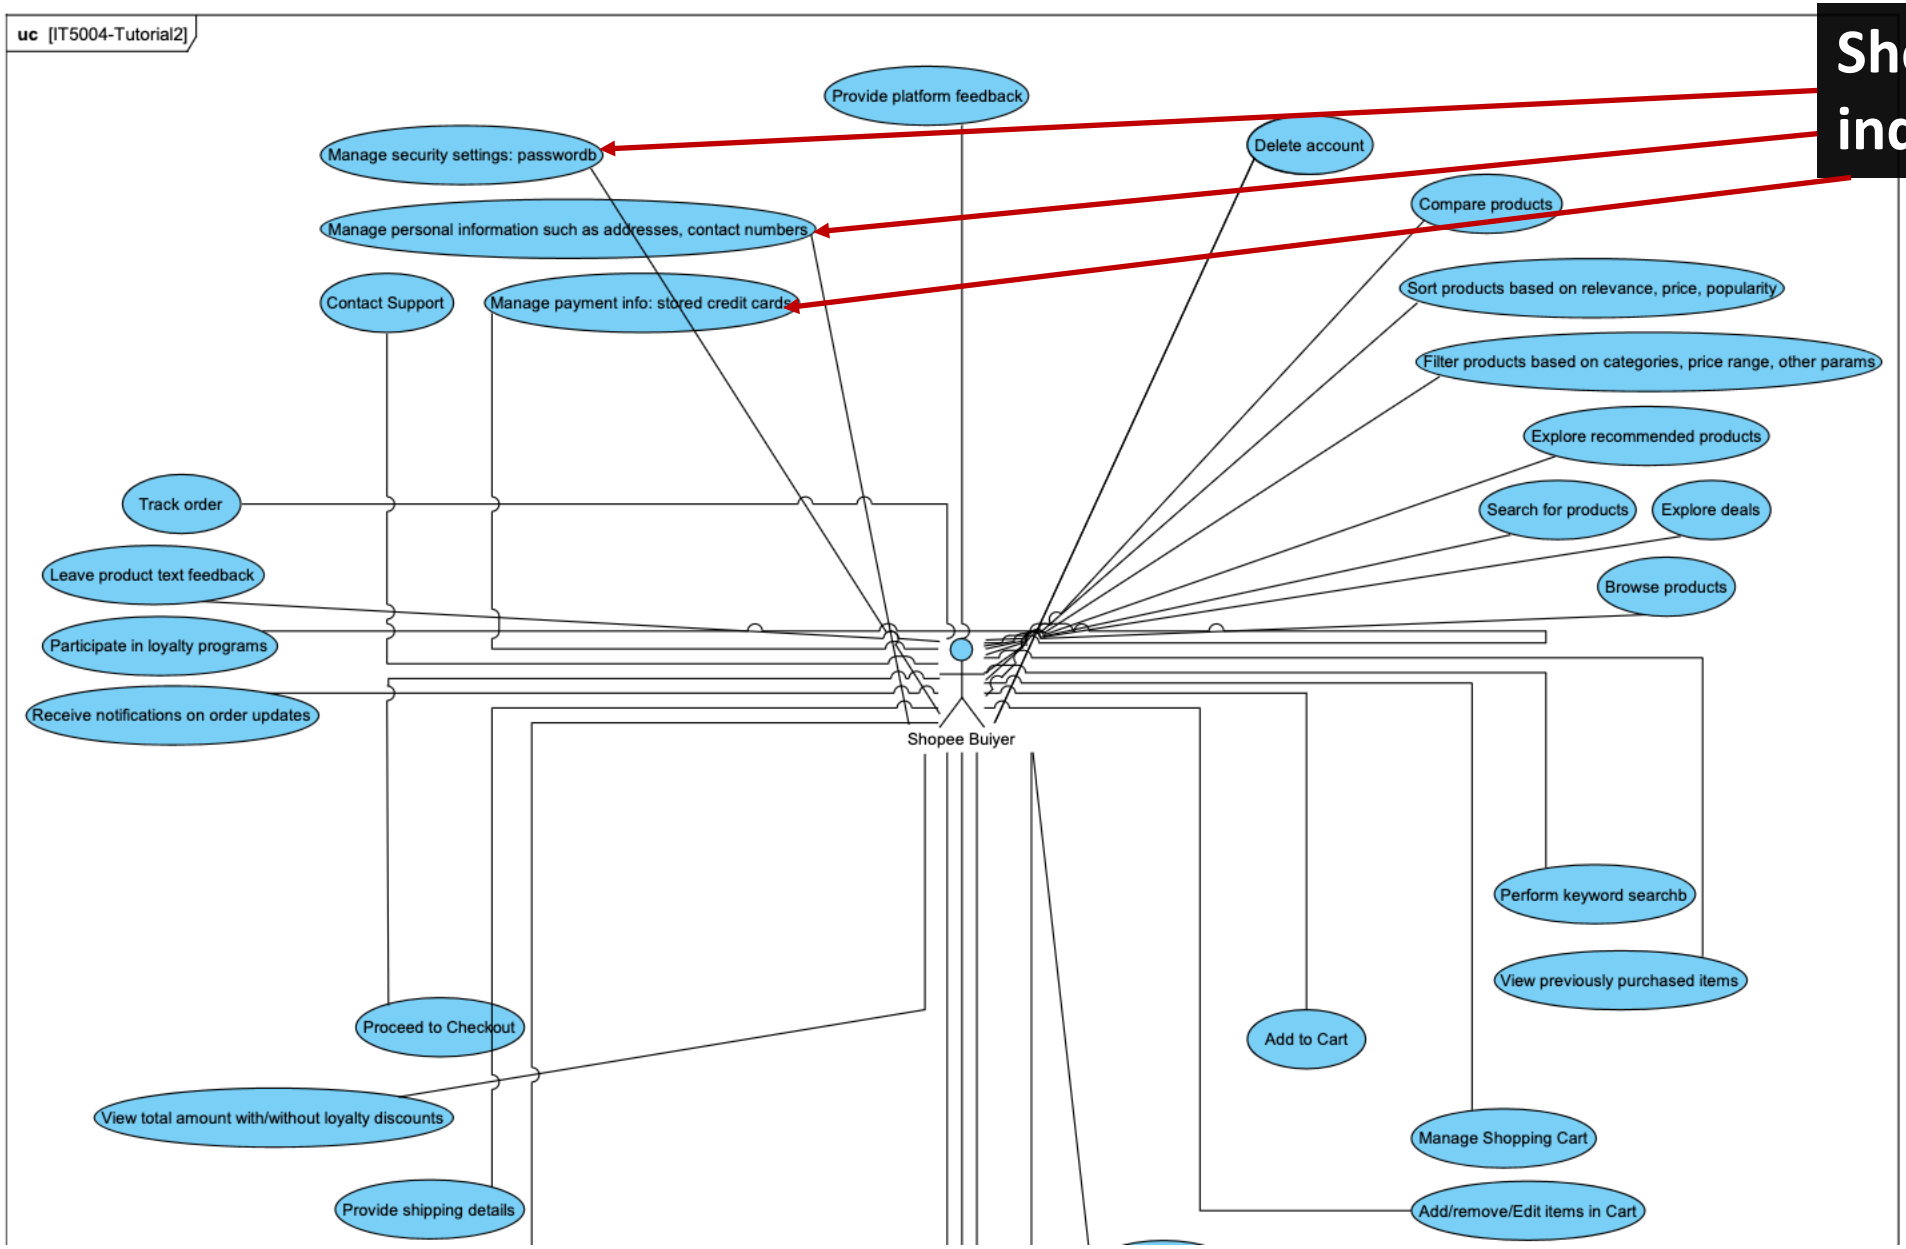
Don’t combine use cases together. 1 use case -> one bubble

Use cases should be very specific rather than describing roughly the idea (it’s not the same as activity diagrams)

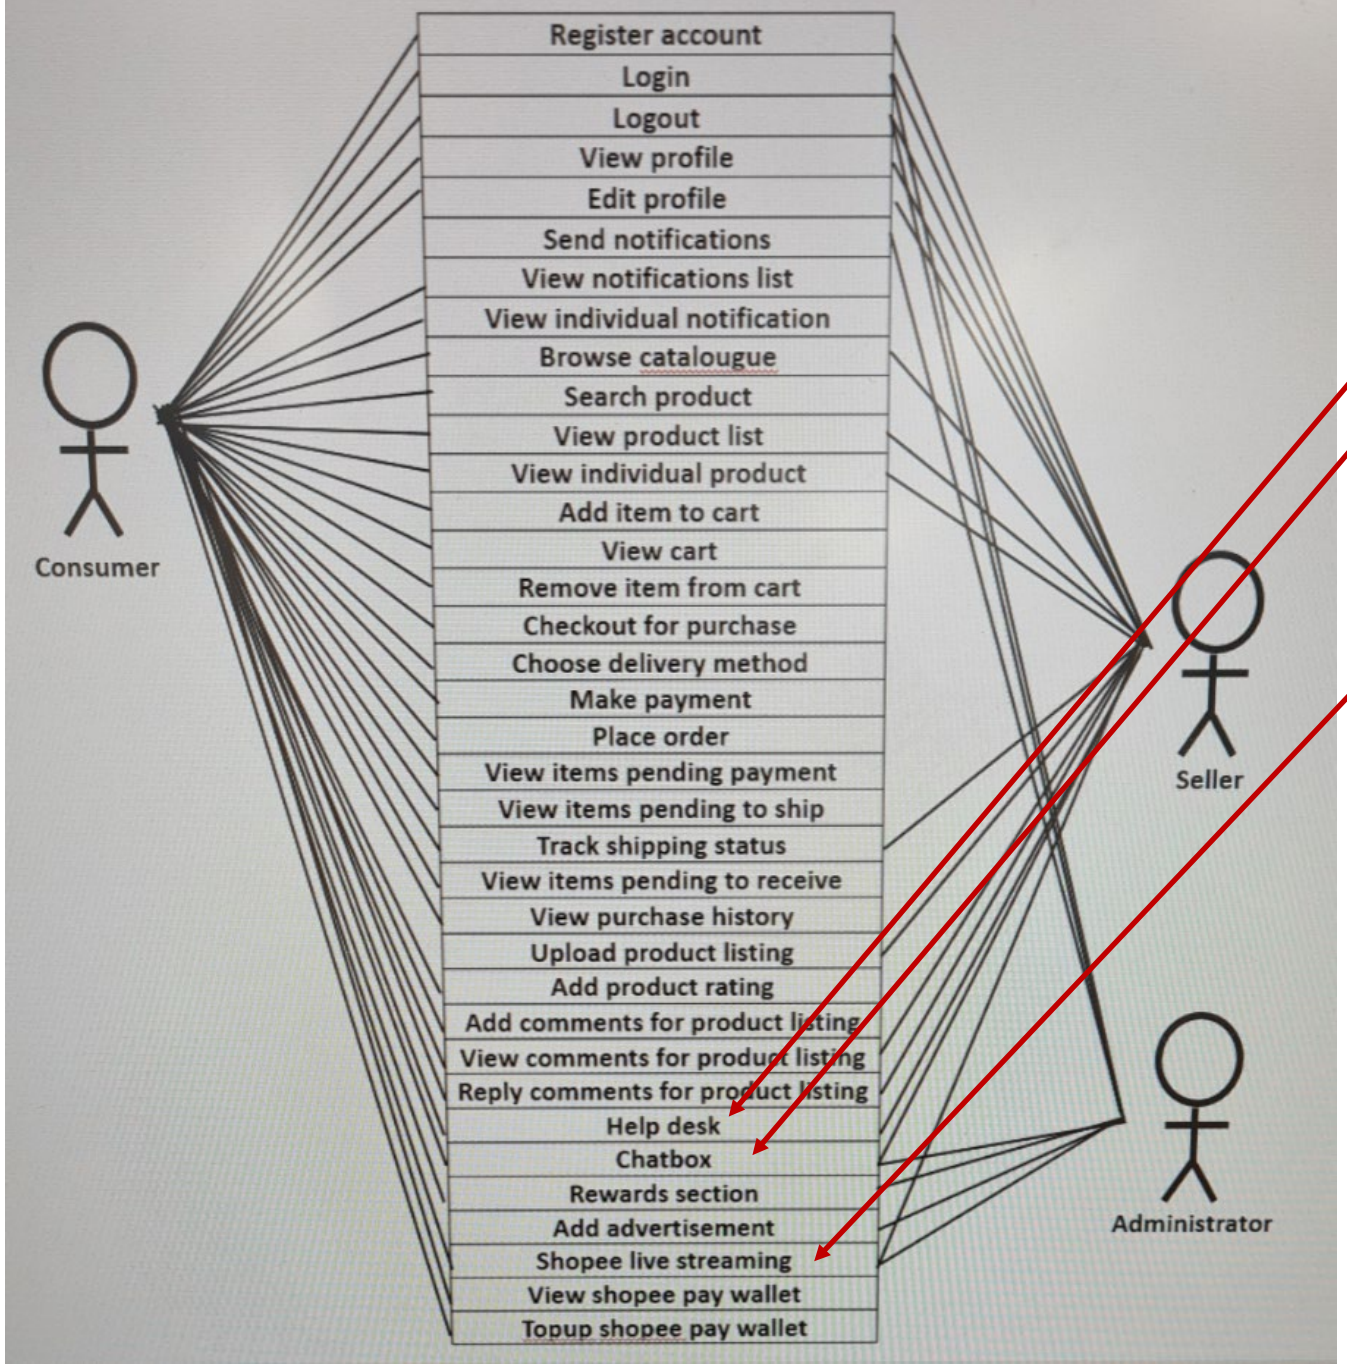
Make payment is part of the check out use case. In any case, it should also not be separate payment use cases (the different payment modes are just different options)



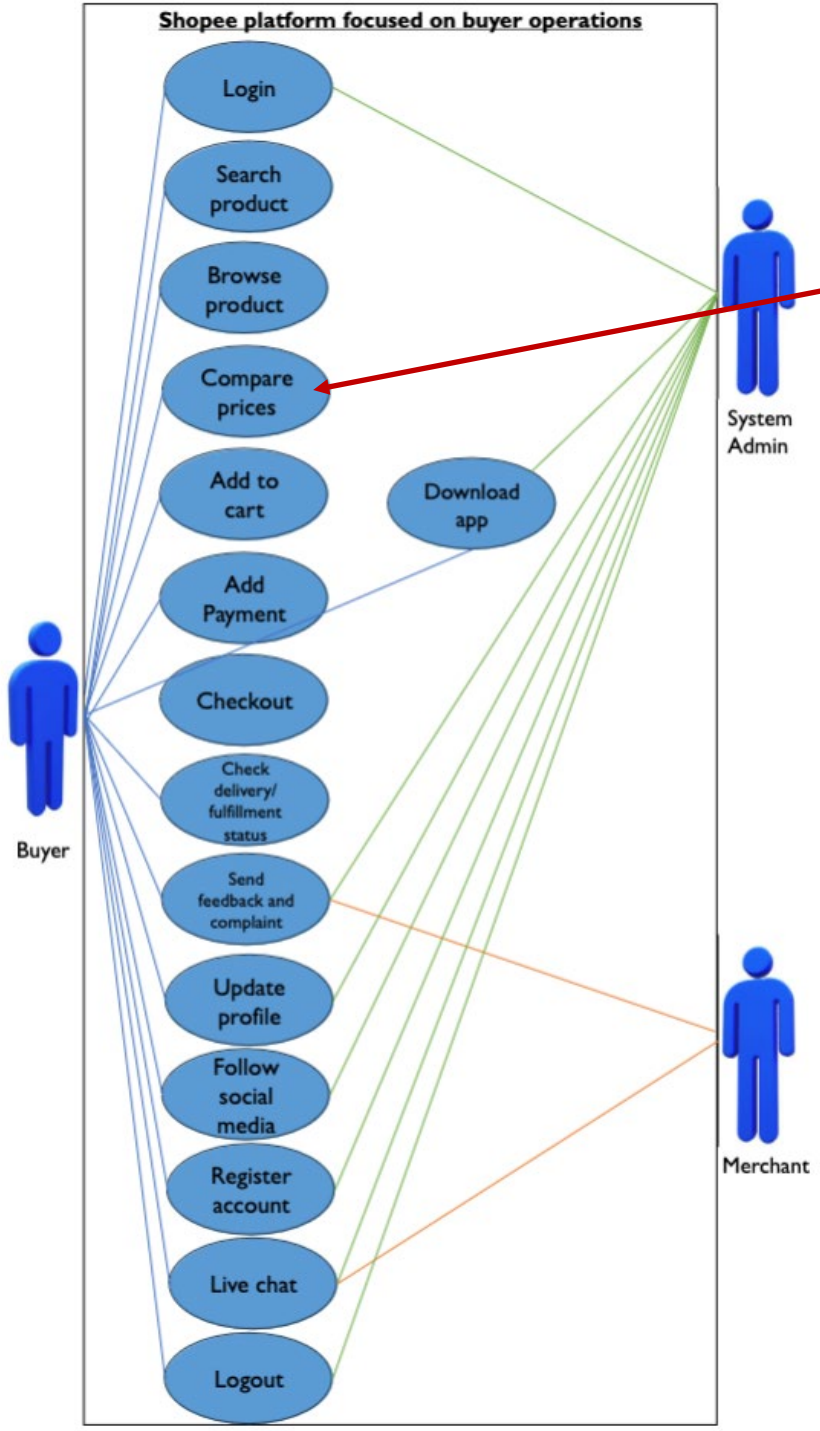
Use cases should be something that the user does not something that is “done to an actor”



Should split into the individual actions



Not use cases. We don't just describe what are some of the types of feature we have on shopee but focus on listing the individual use cases



Compare price is not a system function. It's what the user will achieve after they have performed certain use cases.

1. Account Operations:
    - Registration: Buyers can create a new account by providing necessary personal information.
    - Authentication: Users can securely log in to their Shopee.sg accounts.
2. Product Exploration:
    - Browsing: Buyers can search and browse products based on categories, keywords, or filters.
    - Product Details: They can view detailed information, images, and prices of products.
    - Sorting and Filtering: Users can sort and filter search results to streamline product discovery.
3. Exclusive Offers and Discounts:
    - Coupon Redemption: Buyers can redeem coupons and apply them during the checkout process.
    - Recommendations: They receive personalized product recommendations based on their browsing and purchase history.
4. Membership Benefits:
    - Exclusive Deals: Premium members can access exclusive deals and discounts available only to them.
5. Purchase Process:
    - Cart Management: Buyers can add products to their cart and review its contents.
    - Checkout: They can proceed to checkout, choose payment methods, and complete purchases securely.
6. Order Management:
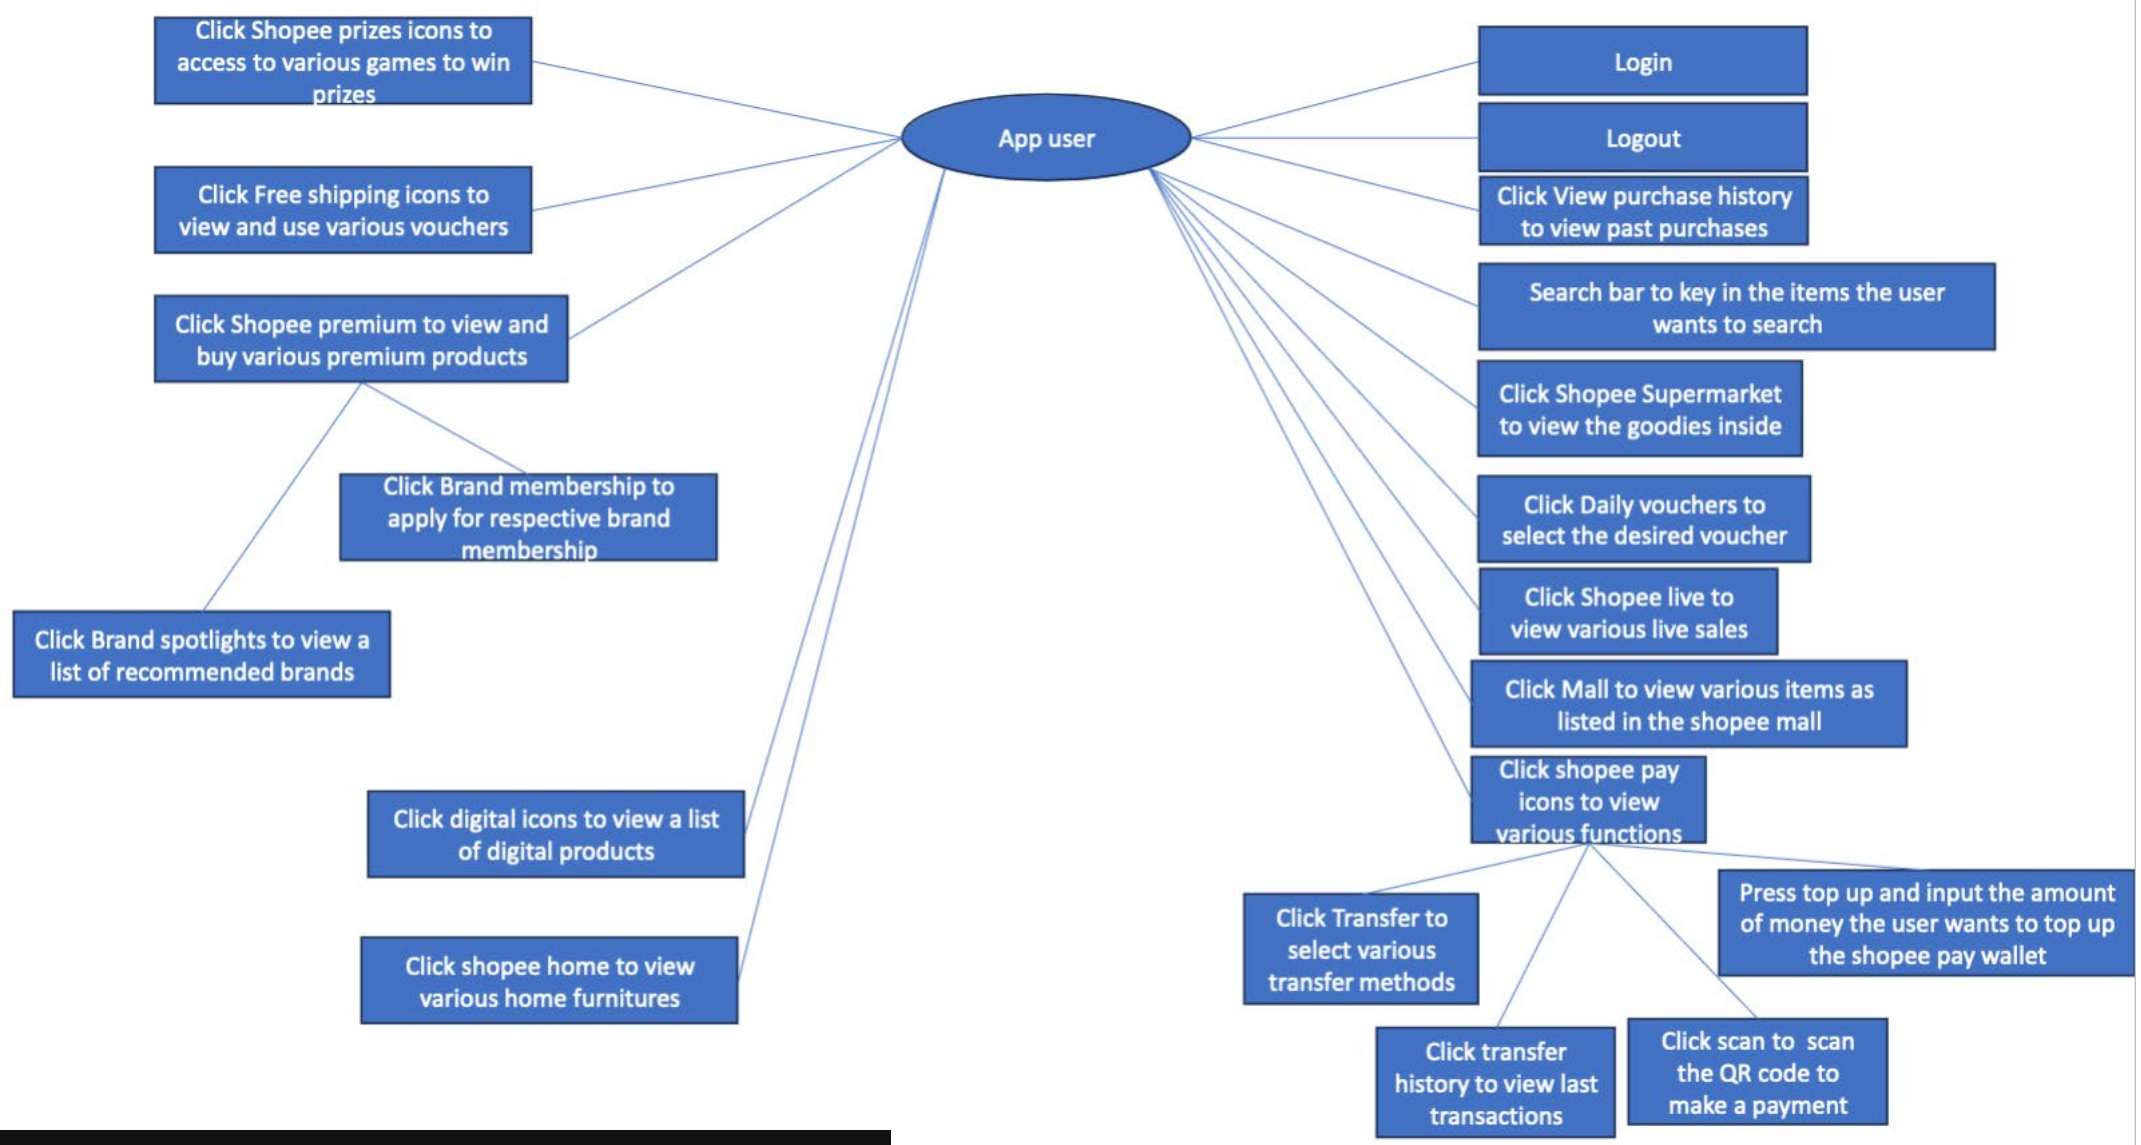
    - History: Buyers can view their order history and track the status of current orders.
    - Modification: They can cancel or modify orders if necessary.

need to name the use cases as a system function rather than describing the process (like in the case of activity diagram)

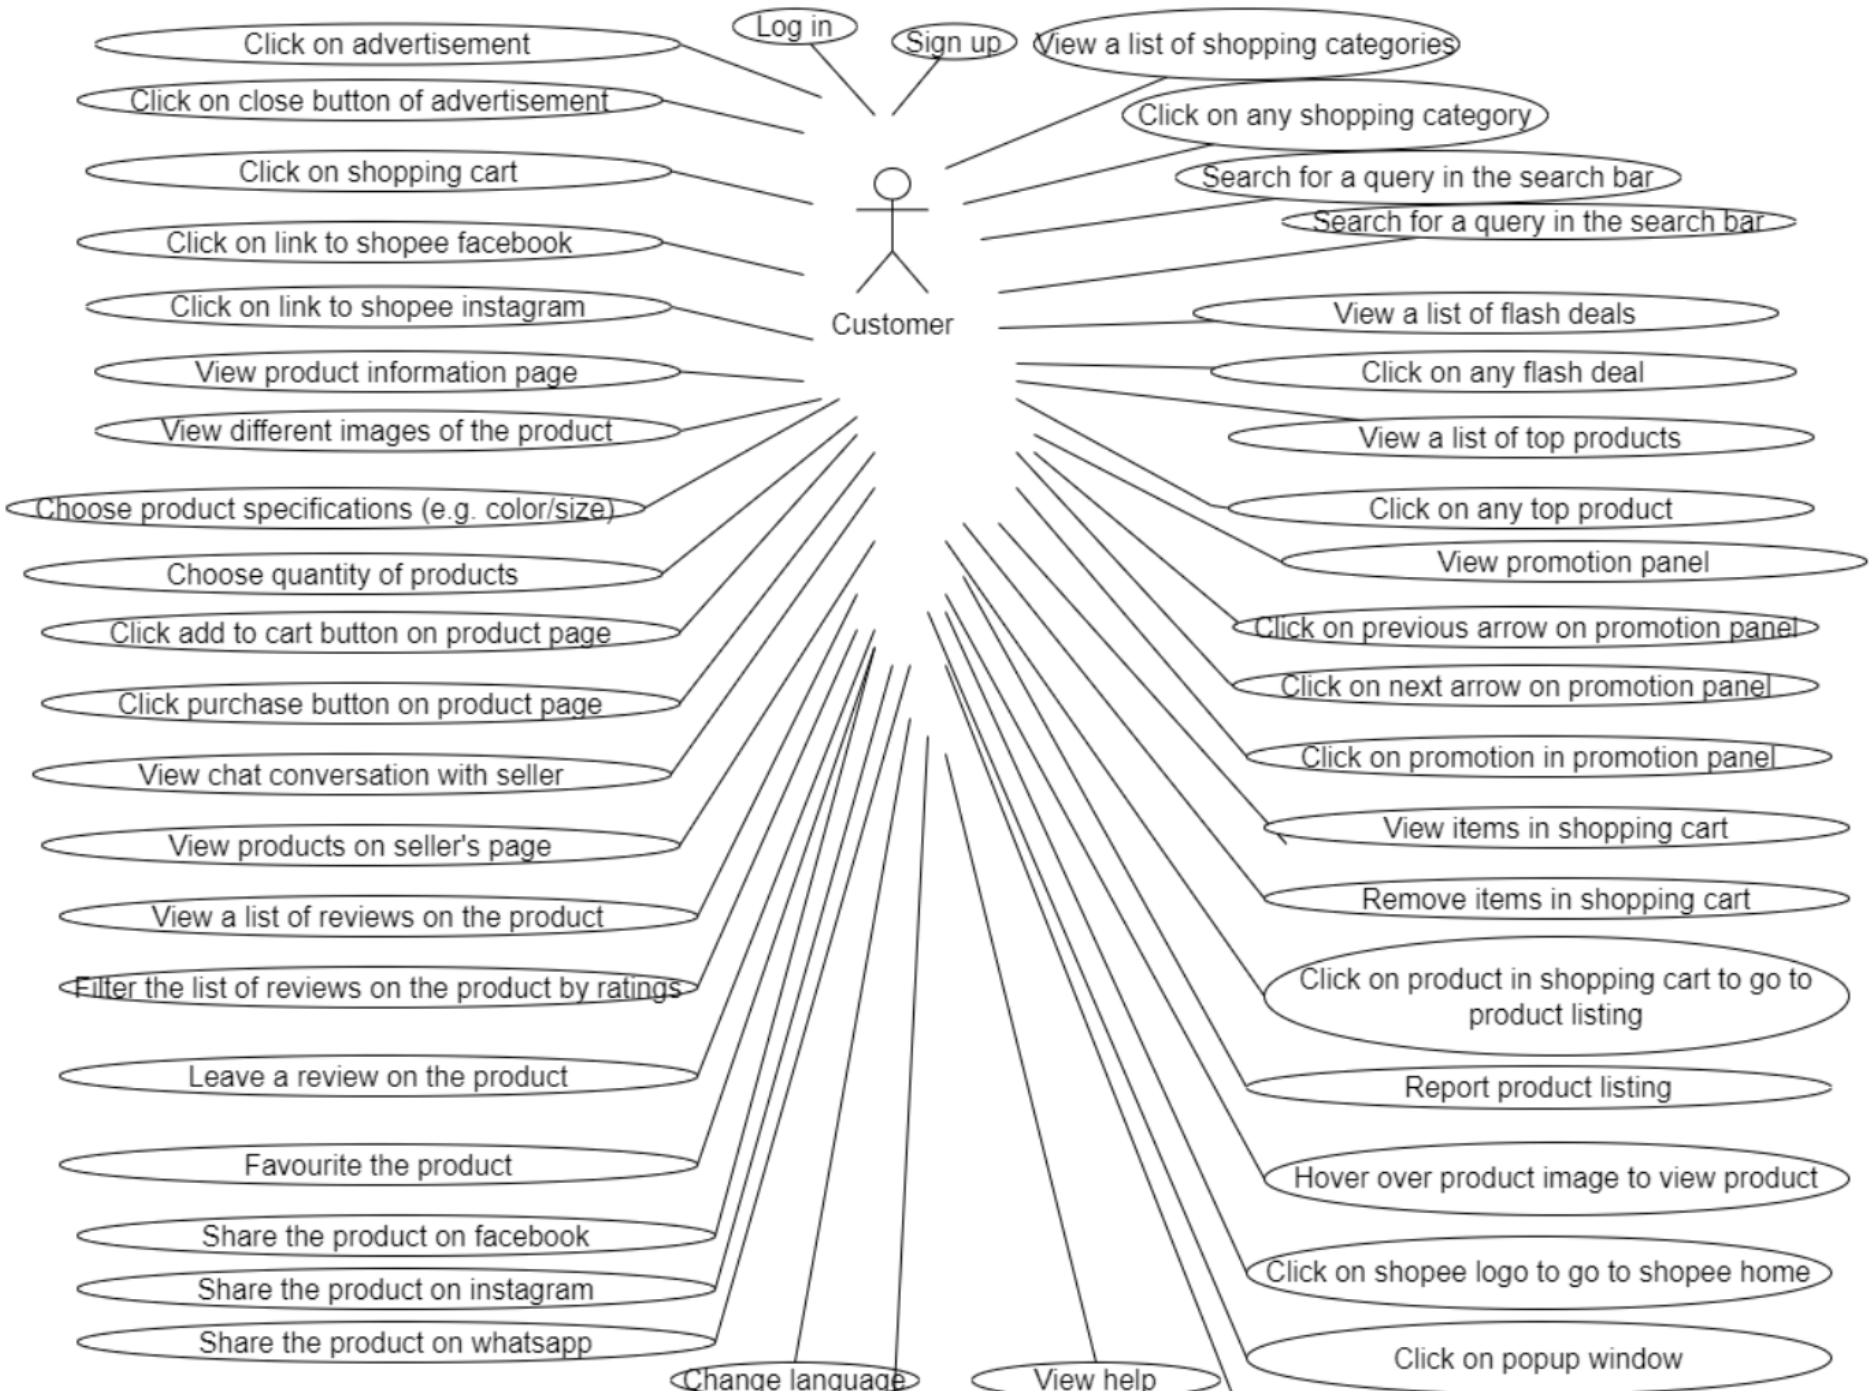
Name use cases as actions rather than process (e.g. login rather than “use login”, “share a product on social media rather than social media sharing, etc)



Take note of the notation

Use cases are not the same as click XXX

Click XXX are not use cases



Let’s work on it together
